

Annual Workplace
Class Action
Litigation Report

2009 Edition

Copyrighted © 2009. All rights reserved. This publication is authored by Seyfarth Shaw LLP. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research permitted under applicable copyright laws, no part of this publication may be reproduced or transmitted by any process or means without the prior written permission of Seyfarth Shaw LLP.

Important Disclaimer

The material in this report is of the nature of general commentary only. It is not offered as legal advice on any specific issue or matter and should not be taken as such. The views expressed are exclusively those of the authors. The authors disclaim any and all liability to any person in respect of anything and the consequences of anything done or omitted to be done wholly or partly in reliance upon the contents of this report. Readers should refrain from acting on the basis of any discussion contained in this publication without obtaining specific legal advice on the particular facts and circumstances at issue. Any sort of comprehensive legal advice on any particular situation is beyond the scope of this report. While the authors have made every effort to provide accurate and up to date information on laws, cases, and regulations, these matters are continuously subject to change. Furthermore, the application of the laws depends on the particular facts and circumstances of each situation, and therefore readers should consult with an attorney before taking any action. This publication is designed to provide authoritative information relative to the subject matter covered. It is offered with the understanding that the authors are not engaged in rendering legal advice or other professional services.

- From a Declaration of Principles jointly adopted by a Committee of the American Bar Association and a Committee of Publishers and Associations.

Writer's direct phone

(312) 460-5893

Writer's e-mail

spoor@seyfarth.com

January 2009

Dear Clients:

The last few years have seen an explosion in class action and collective action litigation involving workplace issues. The present downturn in the economic climate is likely to fuel even more lawsuits. The stakes in this type of employment litigation can be extremely significant, as the financial risks of such cases are enormous. More often than not, class actions adversely affect the market share of a corporation and impact its reputation in the marketplace. It is a legal exposure which keeps corporate counsel and business executives awake at night.

Defense of corporations in complex, high-stakes workplace litigation is one of the hallmarks of Seyfarth Shaw's practice. Through that work, our attorneys are on the forefront of the myriad of issues confronting employers in class action litigation.

In order to assist our clients in understanding and avoiding such litigation, we are pleased to present the 2009 edition of the Seyfarth Shaw Annual Workplace Class Action Litigation Report. This edition, authored by the class action attorneys in our Labor & Employment Department, contains a circuit-by-circuit and state-by-state review of significant class action rulings rendered in 2008, and analyzes the most significant settlements over the past twelve months in class actions and collective actions. We hope this Annual Report will assist our clients in understanding class action and collective action exposures and the developing case law under both federal and state law.

Very truly yours,

J. Stephen Poor
Firm Managing Partner

Author's Note

Our Annual Report analyzes the leading class action and collective action decisions of 2008 involving claims against employers brought in federal courts under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 ("Title VII"), the Age Discrimination in Employment Act ("ADEA"), the Fair Labor Standards Act ("FLSA"), the Employee Retirement Income Security Act ("ERISA"), and a host of other federal statutes applicable to workplace issues. The Report also analyzes class action and collective action rulings involving claims brought against employers in all fifty state court systems, including decisions pertaining to employment laws, wage & hour laws, and breach of employment contract actions. The key class action and collective action settlements over the past year are also analyzed, both in terms of gross settlement dollars in private plaintiff and government-initiated lawsuits as well as injunctive relief provisions in consent decrees. Finally, the Report also discusses important federal and state court rulings in non-workplace cases which are significant in their impact on the defense of workplace class action litigation. In total, there are 650 decisions analyzed in the Report.

The cases decided in 2008 foreshadow the direction of class action litigation in the coming year. One certain conclusion is that employment law class action and collective action litigation is becoming ever more sophisticated and will continue to be a source of significant financial exposure to employers well into the future. Employers also can expect that class action and collective action lawsuits increasingly will combine claims under multiple statutes, thereby requiring the defense bar to have a cross-disciplinary understanding of substantive employment law as well as the procedural peculiarities of opt-out classes under Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and the opt-in procedures in FLSA and ADEA collective actions.

This report represents the collective contributions of a significant number of our colleagues at Seyfarth Shaw LLP. We wish to thank and acknowledge those contributions by Richard L. Alfred, Lorie Almon, Raymond C. Baldwin, Brett C. Bartlett, Edward W. Bergmann, William M. Brown, Rob J. Carty, Jr., Mark A. Casciari, John L. Collins, Brian Cousin, Ariel Cudkowicz, Catherine M. Dacre, Christopher J. DeGroff, Gilmore F. Diekmann, Jr., Brigitte Duffy, William F. Dugan, Bridgette Duffy, Brenda H. Feis, Noah A. Finkel, Michael Gallion, Christopher Garcia, Timothy F. Haley, David D. Kadue, Lynn Kappelman, Thomas R. Kaufman, Raymond R. Kepner, Mary Kay Klimesh, Ronald J. Kramer, Richard B. Lapp, Kari Erickson Levine, Richard P. McArdle, John F. Meyers, Ian H. Morrison, Mark Oberti, Camille A. Olson, Andrew Paley, Kate Perrelli, Thomas J. Piskorski, George E. Preonas, David Ross, Jeffrey K. Ross, David J. Rowland, Alfred L. Sanderson, Richard Scharlat, Jeremy Sherman, Fredrick T. Smith, Diane M. Soubly, Edwin Sullivan, Kenneth D. Sulzer, Joseph S. Turner, Peter Walker, Tim M. Watson, Robert Whitman, Thomas Wybenga, and Kenwood C. Youmans.

Our goal is for this Report to guide clients through the sticky thicket of class action and collective action decisional law, and to enable corporate counsel to make sound and informed litigation decisions while minimizing risk. We hope that you find the Seyfarth Shaw Annual Workplace Class Action Litigation Report to be useful.

Gerald L. Maatman, Jr./General Editor
Co-Chair, Complex Discrimination Litigation
Practice Group of Seyfarth Shaw LLP

A Note On Class Action And Collective Action Terms And Laws

References are made to Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure and 29 U.S.C. § 216(b) throughout this Report. These are the two main statutory sources for class action and collective action decisional law. Both are procedural devices used in federal court for determining the rights and remedies of litigants whose cases involve common questions of law and fact. The following summary provides a brief overview of Rule 23 and § 216(b).

Class Action Terms

The Report uses the term class action to mean any civil case in which parties indicated their intent to sue on behalf of themselves as well as others not specifically named in the suit at some point prior to the final resolution of the matter. This definition includes a case in which a class was formally approved by a judge (a certified class action), as well as a putative class action, in which a judge denied a motion for certification, in which a motion for certification had been made but a decision was still pending at the time of final resolution, or in which no formal motion had been made but other indications were present suggesting that class treatment was a distinct possibility (such as a statement in a complaint that the plaintiffs intended to bring the action on behalf of others similarly situated).

Although certified class actions may receive considerable attention if they are reported publicly, defendants also must confront putative cases that contain the potential for class treatment as a result of filing a motion for certification or because of allegations in the original complaint that assert that the named plaintiffs seek to represent others similarly situated. Even if such cases are never actually certified, the possibility of the litigation expanding into a formal class action raises the stakes significantly, perhaps requiring a more aggressive (and costlier) defense or resulting in a settlement on an individual basis at a premium.

Rule 23

Rule 23 governs class actions in federal courts, and typically involves lawsuits that affect potential class members in different states or that have a nexus with federal law. Rule 23 requires a party seeking class certification to satisfy the four requirements of section (a) of the rule and at least one of three conditions of section (b) of the rule. Under U.S. Supreme Court precedent, a district court must undertake a “rigorous analysis of Rule 23 prerequisites” before certifying a class. General Telephone Co. of Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 161 (1982). More often than not, plaintiffs will support their motion for class certification with deposition testimony, declarations of putative class members, and expert opinions in the form of affidavits of expert witnesses. Courts often observe that the appropriate analysis in reviewing this evidence is not equivalent to an examination of the merits or a battle between the parties’ experts. Rather, the salient issue is whether plaintiffs’ legal theories and factual materials satisfy the Rule 23 requirements.

The Rule 23(a) requirements include:

- Numerosity – The individuals who would comprise the class must be so numerous that joinder of them all into the lawsuit would be impracticable.
- Commonality – There must be questions of law and fact common to the proposed class.
- Typicality – The claims or defenses of the representative parties must be typical of the claims and defenses of putative class members.
- Adequacy of Representation – The representative plaintiffs and their counsel must be capable of fairly and adequately protecting the interests of the class.

Once a plaintiff establishes the four requirements of Rule 23(a), he or she must satisfy one of the three requirements of Rule 23(b). In practice, a plaintiff typically establishes the propriety of class certification under either Rule 23(b)(2) or Rule 23(b)(3) in an employment-related case.

Because application of each rule depends on the nature of the injuries alleged and the relief sought, and imposes different certification standards on the class, the differences between Rule 23(b)(2) and (b)(3) are critical in employment-related class action litigation. In the words of the rule, a class may be certified under Rule 23(b)(2) if the party opposing the class “has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole.” In other words, plaintiffs seeking to certify class actions under Rule 23(b)(2) are restricted to those cases where the primary relief sought is injunctive or declaratory in nature. Rule 23(b)(2) does not extend to cases in which the appropriate final relief relates exclusively or predominantly to money damages. Rule 23(b)(2) provides for a binding litigation order as to all class members without guarantees of personal notice and the opportunity to opt-out of the suit.

Rule 23(b)(3) is designed for circumstances in which class action treatment is not as clearly called for as in Rule 23(b)(1) and Rule 23(b)(2) situations, when a class action may nevertheless be convenient and desirable. A class may be certified under Rule 23(b)(3) if the court finds that questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. Pertinent considerations include the interest of the members of the class in individually controlling the prosecution of separate actions; the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already commenced by members of the class; the desirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; and the difficulties likely to be encountered in the management of a class action.

To qualify for certification under Rule 23(b)(3), therefore, a class must meet not only the requirements of Rule 23(a), but also two additional requirements: “(1) common questions must predominate over any questions affecting only individual members; and (2) class resolution must be superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy.” Amchem Products, Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 615 (1997). While the common question requirement of Rule 23(a)(2) and the predominance requirement of Rule 23(b)(3) overlap, the predominance requirement is more stringent than the common question requirement. Thus, even though a case may present common questions of law or fact, those questions may not predominate, and class certification would be inappropriate.

Rule 23(b)(3) applies to cases where the primary relief sought is money damages. The Supreme Court has determined – in Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815 (1999) – that unlike in Rule 23(b)(2) class actions, each class member in Rule 23(b)(3) actions for money damages is entitled as a matter of due process to personal notice and an opportunity to opt-out of the class action. Accordingly, Rule 23(c)(2) guarantees those rights for each member of a class certified under Rule 23(b)(3). There are no comparable procedural guarantees for class members under Rule 23(b)(2).

29 U.S.C. § 216(b)

This statute governs multi-plaintiff lawsuits under the ADEA and the FLSA. Generally, such lawsuits are known as collective actions (as opposed to class actions).

Under 29 U.S.C. § 216(b), courts generally recognize that plaintiffs and other “non-party” individuals may not proceed collectively until they establish that they should be permitted to do so as a class. Under § 216(b), courts have held that “similarly situated” individuals may proceed collectively as a class. The federal circuits have not agreed on the standard according to which such a class should be certified. Two competing standards for certification are recognized.

The first approach adopts the view that the “similarly situated” inquiry is coextensive with the procedure used in class actions brought pursuant to Rule 23. Using this methodology, the court analyzes the putative class for factors including numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy of representation. This typically occurs after some discovery has taken place. This approach is unusual and is not favored.

The second approach is a two-tiered approach involving conditioned certification and a potential decertification process. It is more commonly used and is the prevailing test in federal courts. It is a “plaintiff-friendly” standard.

In the context of the first stage of conditional certification, plaintiffs typically move for conditional certification and permission to send notices to prospective class members. This generally occurs at an early stage of the case. Courts have held that a plaintiff’s burden at this stage is light. A ruling at this stage of the litigation often is based upon the complaint’s allegations and any affidavits submitted in favor of or in objection to conditional certification.

Courts have not clearly defined the qualitative or quantitative standards of evidence that should be applied at this stage. Courts are often reluctant to grant or deny certification on the merits of a plaintiff's case. This frustrates defendants with clearly meritorious arguments in defense of the litigation, such as those based on compelling proof that would establish the exempt status of the plaintiffs and other employees alleged to be similarly situated.

Instead, courts appear to find the most convincing proof that certification is improper based on evidence that putative class members perform different jobs in different locations or facilities, under different supervisors, and potentially pursuant to differing policies and practices. Courts also have held that certification is inappropriate when individualized inquiries into applicable defenses are required, such as when the employer asserts that the relevant employees are exempt.

Where conditional certification is granted, a defendant has the opportunity to request that the class be decertified after discovery is wholly or partially completed in the subsequent, second stage of decertification. Courts engage in a much more rigorous scrutiny of the similarities and differences that exist amongst members of the class at the second, decertification stage. The scrutiny is based upon a more developed, if not entirely complete, record of evidence. Upon an employer's motion for decertification, a court assesses the issue of similarity more critically and may revisit questions concerning the locations where employees work, the employees' supervisors, their employment histories, the policies and practices according to which they perform work and are paid, and the distinct defenses that may require individualized analyses.

Opt-In/Opt-Out Procedures

Certification procedures are different under Rule 23 and 29 U.S.C. § 216(b). Under Rule 23(b)(2), a court's order may bind the class; under Rule 23(b)(3), however, a class member must opt-out of the class action (after receiving a class action notice). If he or she does not do so, they are bound by the judgment. Conversely, under § 216(b), a class member must opt-in to the lawsuit before he or she will be bound. While at or near 100% of class members are effectively bound by a Rule 23 order, opt-in rates in most § 216(b) collective actions typically run from 10% to 30%.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

I.	OVERVIEW OF THE YEAR IN WORKPLACE CLASS ACTION LITIGATION	1
A.	Trends In Workplace Class Action Litigation In 2008	2
B.	Impact Of Legislative Activity At The Federal Level	4
C.	Implications Of These Developments For 2009	5
II.	SIGNIFICANT CLASS ACTION SETTLEMENTS IN 2008	7
A.	Top Ten Private Plaintiff-Initiated Monetary Settlements	7
B.	Top Ten Government-Initiated Monetary Settlements.....	13
C.	Noteworthy Injunctive Relief Provisions In Class Action Settlements	15
III.	SIGNIFICANT FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT DISCRIMINATION CLASS ACTION AND EEOC PATTERN OR PRACTICE RULINGS	19
A.	Employment Discrimination Class Actions Under Title VII Of The Civil Rights Act Of 1964	19
B.	EEOC Pattern Or Practice Cases.....	32
C.	Other Federal Rulings Affecting The Defense Of Workplace Class Action Litigation	86
IV.	SIGNIFICANT COLLECTIVE ACTION RULINGS UNDER THE AGE DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT ACT	181
A.	Cases Certifying Or Refusing To Certify ADEA Collective Action Claims.....	181
B.	Other Federal Rulings Affecting The Defense Of ADEA Collective Action Claims	185
V.	SIGNIFICANT COLLECTIVE ACTION RULINGS UNDER THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT	199
A.	Cases Certifying Or Refusing To Certify FLSA Collective Action Claims.....	199
B.	Other Federal Rulings Affecting The Defense Of FLSA Collective Action Claims	278
VI.	SIGNIFICANT CLASS ACTION RULINGS UNDER THE EMPLOYEE RETIREMENT INCOME SECURITY ACT OF 1974.....	355
A.	Cases Certifying Or Refusing To Certify ERISA Class Actions.....	355

B.	Other Federal Rulings Affecting The Defense Of ERISA Class Action Litigation	391
VII.	SIGNIFICANT STATE LAW CLASS ACTION RULINGS	501
A.	Employment Law Rulings	501
B.	Wage & Hour Rulings	504
C.	Rulings In Breach Of Employment Contract/Miscellaneous Workplace Claims	524
D.	Other State Law Rulings Affecting The Defense Of Workplace Class Action Litigation	538
VIII.	RULINGS ON THE CLASS ACTION FAIRNESS ACT	581
	APPENDIX – TABLE OF 2008 WORKPLACE CLASS ACTION AND COLLECTIVE ACTION LITIGATION RULINGS	611

I. OVERVIEW OF THE YEAR IN WORKPLACE CLASS ACTION LITIGATION

The plaintiffs' employment bar filed and prosecuted significant class action and collective action lawsuits against employers in 2008. As this Report reflects, federal and state courts addressed a myriad of new theories and defenses in ruling on class action and collective action litigation issues.

Developments over the past year reveal five key trends.

First, the financial meltdown of the economy during 2008 fueled more class action litigation. The plaintiffs' bar increased the pace of ERISA class action filings seeking recovery for 401(k) losses. As lay-offs increased at a precipitous rate, displaced workers filed more age discrimination and Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification lawsuits. Even more litigation is expected in 2009, as additional workers lose their jobs and the prospects for other employment grow dimmer.

Second, the change in enforcement philosophy with the Obama Administration and job displacements caused by the troubled economy create a "perfect storm" of workplace litigation exposures for employers. The Obama Administration is expected to be more protective of workers' rights than the Bush Administration has been over the last 8 years. Coupled with recent Supreme Court rulings favoring workers, more government enforcement litigation is likely in the coming year.

Third, the volume of wage & hour litigation continues to increase exponentially. Collective actions pursued in federal court under the Fair Labor Standards Act ("FLSA") outnumbered all other types of private class actions in employment-related cases. As a result, FLSA collective actions produced more rulings in 2008 than did class actions for employment discrimination or under ERISA. The most significant growth in wage & hour litigation, however, centered at the state court level, and especially in California, Florida, Illinois, New Jersey, New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Texas (the key FLSA decisions of 2008 are analyzed in Chapter V and the leading state wage & hour rulings over the past year are examined in Chapter VII). This trend is likely to continue in 2009.

Fourth, the Class Action Fairness Act of 2005 ("CAFA") continued to have significant effects on workplace litigation, primarily wage & hour class actions filed in state court. The past twelve months saw evolving case law developments on jurisdictional issues under the CAFA (the key rulings of 2008 interpreting CAFA are analyzed in Chapter VIII of this Report). As the plaintiffs' bar continues to devise techniques to adapt to the CAFA, rulings on the scope, meaning, and application of the law are already numerous for a statute of such recent vintage.

Fifth and finally, the financial stakes in workplace class action litigation increased yet again in 2008. Plaintiffs' lawyers have continued to push the envelope in crafting damages theories to expand the size of classes and the scope of recoveries. These strategies resulted in a series of massive settlements in nationwide class actions (the leading class action and collective action settlements for 2008 are discussed in Chapter II). This trend is also unlikely to abate in 2009.

A. Trends In Workplace Class Action Litigation In 2008

While shareholder and securities class action filings experienced an uptick in 2008, employment-related class action filings increased significantly. Anecdotally, surveys of corporate counsel confirmed that workplace litigation – and especially class action and multi-plaintiff lawsuits – continues as the chief exposure driving corporate legal budget expenditures.

In terms of key decisions, there was no class action ruling in 2008 quite like Dukes, et al. v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., a Title VII gender discrimination case challenging pay and promotions involving 1.5 million class members. On February 6, 2007, a three-judge panel affirmed the certification order in Dukes by a 2 to 1 vote. Wal-Mart subsequently filed a petition for rehearing en banc by the entire Ninth Circuit. On December 11, 2007, the panel mooted that petition by vacating its earlier ruling and issuing a new ruling that refined its Rule 23 analysis, while reaching the same result. Both plaintiffs and Wal-Mart filed new petitions for rehearing en banc in January of 2008, but the Ninth Circuit failed to pass on the petitions in 2008. A future ruling by the Ninth Circuit in Dukes on a subsequent rehearing en banc – and further appellate proceedings thereafter, including a possible decision by the U.S. Supreme Court – likely will be one of the top class action developments in 2009 and beyond.

The certification order in Dukes, et al. v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. influenced many class action developments in 2008. The plaintiffs' bar increasingly used the theories endorsed in Dukes to seek certification of "punitive damages" only classes under Rule 23(b)(2), as well as pressing for certification of mega-classes involving pay and promotion claims of employees in multiple company facilities on a nationwide basis. Outside of the Ninth Circuit, employers fought these theories with good success, as 2008 witnessed many pro-employer victories in class certification battles.

FLSA collective action litigation increased again in 2008 and far outpaced employment discrimination class action filings. The increase in filings suggests that workers and their attorneys are bypassing the violations-reporting system at the U.S. Department of Labor and bringing private lawsuits in the pursuit of more lucrative resolutions. While plaintiffs continued to achieve initial certification of wage & hour collective actions, employers also secured several significant victories in defeating conditional certification motions and obtaining decertification of § 216(b) collective actions. Of particular significance was Wal-Mart's announcement on December 23, 2008, that it reached agreements in principle with plaintiffs' lawyers to settle 63 wage & hour class actions throughout the U.S. involving FLSA and state law claims for off-the-clock work, failure to provide meal and rest breaks, and failure to pay overtime. Each of the 63 settlements will be subject to approval in the coming months by the particular courts in which the class actions are pending. Wal-Mart and plaintiffs' lawyers estimated that the total pay-out over 2009 could reach $350 million to $640 million. Given the trickle-down phenomenon of class action settlements (and the increased awareness of wage & hour issues by workers), it is expected that the pursuit of nationwide FLSA collective actions by the plaintiffs' bar will continue in 2009.

More than any other area of workplace litigation, ERISA class actions took center stage in 2008 as case filings surged and settlements led all other types of class actions. While the top ten ERISA class action settlements totaled $1.818 billion in 2007, they increased exponentially in 2008 to $17.7 billion. The current wave of ERISA class actions has not yet crested. Plaintiffs' lawyers bringing ERISA class claims are pursuing two broad categories of cases, including "stock drop" suits in which the ERISA plan participants complain of the availability of employer stock as an investment option (after the company stock suffers a dramatic decline, resulting in losses to plan participants who were invested in the company stock), and "plan administration" suits in which participants challenge excessive advisory fees and other mechanics of how the plan is run.

Given the enormous financial stakes, trials of class actions continue to be rare. Accordingly, the key event and driver of risk and exposure in class actions is the court's decision on whether to certify a class. Nonetheless, several ERISA class actions, wage & hour collective actions, and EEOC pattern or practice actions did proceed to trial or judgment in 2008. These trial verdicts and judgments included:

- the $187 million judgment for wage & hour violations on September 3, 2008, in a class action entitled Hummel, et al. v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., Case No. 3127 (Court of Common Pleas of Philadelphia County, PA);
- the $105 million judgment for wage & hour violations on March 19, 2008, in Chou, et al. Starbucks, Case No. GIC 836925 (Superior Court of San Diego County, CA);
- the $35.5 million verdict for FLSA violations in a collective action by store managers upheld by the 11th Circuit on December 16, 2008, in Morgan, et al. v. Family Dollar Inc., Case No 07-12398 (11th Cir.);
- the $28.1 million verdict for breach of contract damages in a class action on behalf of retirees on November 12, 2008, in Adderley, et al. v. National Football League Players Association, Case No. 07-CV-943 (N.D. Cal.);
- the $19 million verdict for race discrimination in a multiple-plaintiff case on September 20, 2008 in Paul, et al. v. Asbury Automotive Group, Case No. 06-CV-1603 (D. Or.); and,

- the $6.5 million verdict for wage & hour violations on June 30, 2008, in a class action entitled Braun, et al. v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., Case No. 19-CO-10-9790 (Dist. Ct. for Dakota County, MN).

If trials of class actions were rare, settlements of class actions in 2008 reflected a continuing trend from past years, in which significant monetary payments were made in mega-class actions. Settlements in FLSA collective actions and ERISA class actions once again outpaced employment discrimination class action settlements in terms of overall settlement values.

B. Impact Of Legislative Activity At The Federal Level

The Class Action Fairness Act of 2005 continues to play a large role in many class actions filed against employers. The CAFA responded to the abuses of state court judges in certifying class action lawsuits involving plaintiffs who filed their claims in states with a reputation for a lack of fairness toward out-of-state defendants. The CAFA modifies the rules for federal court jurisdiction over class actions based on the diversity of citizenship test. Before the CAFA, all named plaintiffs in a class action had to be citizens of states differing from those of all defendants, a situation that typically would not be met in class actions seeking nationwide classes. In addition, there was a minimum monetary threshold of $75,000 to be met by every plaintiff in the case.

With the CAFA, the rules for diversity jurisdiction have eased, though for class actions only, so that diversity of the parties can be achieved if any class member is a citizen of a different state from any defendant and if the aggregated, not individual, amount in controversy for all class members is at least $5 million, and the class involves more than 100 people. As a result, the CAFA relaxes the historic strict standard for diversity jurisdiction to allow defendants to remove what were formerly “non-diverse” state law-based class actions.

The CAFA’s impact over the past year has been significant. More class actions are being filed in federal courts, and more intrastate class actions are being heard in federal courts through the removal mechanisms under the CAFA. Because the law’s provisions are designed to prevent plaintiffs’ counsel from keeping class actions in state court that are more appropriately litigated in federal court, the CAFA forecloses the pleading tactic of requesting damages of less than $75,000 per class member (the jurisdictional limit for a federal court to hear a claim involving plaintiffs and defendants of different states) to stymie a defendant from removing the lawsuit to federal court. Over the last year, employers repeatedly invoked the statute to remove class actions filed in state court to federal court. In turn, federal courts addressed several novel issues arising under the CAFA.

The CAFA also established a class action “bill of rights” for litigants, which includes various protections for class members such as judicial review and approval of “injunctive relief only” settlements, protection against losses to the class because of payments to class counsel, more standardized settlement notification information, and specific requirements regarding the notification of federal and state officials of proposed class action settlements. In the context of workplace class actions, this feature of the CAFA has resulted in few court rulings to date.

The statute has had profound effects, however, on considerations underlying case strategy and the structuring of class actions. In this context, the CAFA's impact on workplace class actions is both varied and evolving. Class actions and collective actions under Title VII, the ADEA, the FLSA, and ERISA typically are brought in federal court. The CAFA may have limited impact on strategic decisions in those cases relative to choice of venue in a federal court or state court. Class actions in state law-based wage & hour litigation are another matter. The plaintiffs' bar and defense bar alike continue to confront novel CAFA issues in these types of cases, for the fight over venue is often a key driver of exposure and risk. On the one hand, employers sued in state law wage & hour class actions are increasingly confronted by plaintiffs' lawyers seeking to avoid removal to federal court by various stratagems, including prayers for relief of less than $5 million, the filing of multiple "baby" class claims on behalf of less than 100 plaintiffs, and limiting the scope of the class to residents of one state. On the other hand, defense counsel seeking (often successfully) to dismiss state law claims pursued by plaintiffs with FLSA claims in "hybrid" wage & hour class actions in federal court also argue that judges should not exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the state law claims; in turn, federal courts are increasingly confronted with questions of whether original jurisdiction exists under the CAFA over such hybrid state law claims, and employers also may face a two front litigation war – one in federal court and the other in state court – depending on resolution of those CAFA issues.

C. Implications Of These Developments For 2009

A certitude of the modern American workplace is that class action and collective action litigation has become very attractive to the plaintiffs' bar. Passage of the CAFA had little impact on the pace and volume of overall workplace class action filings in 2008. Instead, the impact of the CAFA has been limited primarily to determine the proper venue, which often has a dramatic impact on the outcome of workplace class actions.

Meanwhile, on the governmental enforcement front, the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC") intensified its litigation filings in 2008. The Commission has followed through on the strategic enforcement and litigation plan it announced in April of 2006; that plan centers on the government bringing more systemic discrimination cases affecting large numbers of workers. The EEOC's prosecution of pattern or practice lawsuits is now an agency-wide priority. As a result, the EEOC is focusing its investigations and resources on systemic discrimination issues. Many of the high-level investigations started in 2006 mushroomed into the institution of EEOC pattern or practice lawsuits in 2008. The Commission's 2008 Annual Report announced that it expects a shift in the composition of its litigation docket from small individual cases to pattern or practice lawsuits on behalf of larger groups of workers. See EEOC Fiscal Year Performance & Accountability Report, at 9. Thus, employers are likely to face even more such claims in 2009.

ERISA class action litigation is also expected to accelerate in 2009. A dramatic increase in class actions brought against 401(k) plan sponsors for breach of fiduciary duties occurred in 2008. Plaintiffs targeted Fortune 500 companies and their 401(k) sponsor committees as defendants. These class actions will likely expand in 2009 to include investment management companies and fund managers. The sub-prime mortgage meltdown also will affect the course of ERISA class action litigation in 2009, as attorneys for retirement plan participants are likely to sue over whether plan fiduciaries made prudent investments in light of the credit, sub-prime mortgage lending, and real estate crises. The precipitous market drops that occurred in 2008 are likely to provide the grist for a multitude of new ERISA class actions.

The lesson to draw from 2008 is that the private plaintiffs' bar and government enforcement attorneys are apt to be equally, if not more, aggressive in 2009 in bringing class action and collective action litigation against employers. Identifying, addressing, and remediating class action vulnerabilities, therefore, deserve a place at the top of corporate counsel's priorities list for 2009.